Subject : Question

Donna,

I am currently in Japan and just met with the Project Haru team. The team is asking who our lead counsel will be for the project?

I know you told me that Jennifer would be the person that was assigned to the project and I think that is fine for the US portion of the deal. However, I don't think she can be lead counsel for the project if it does take off. The reason I say this is because Takimoto-san is not supportive of her as lead counsel since the target company operates in multiple regions. I think Takimoto-san will want a more experienced person who can handle a multi-national company acquisition.

Could you tell me who you recommend be lead counsel for this project if it does take-off? I assume it is Nick, but I wanted to confirm.

By the way, we are still two months away from a GO on the project. But things are heating up and I am kind of enjoying being the go-between with the owner.

Mike

PS I am truly disappointed that Jennifer seems to have lost a great deal of credibility with PPD. I wish I knew how to help her overcome it.
